HISTORICAL SKETCH.

By CHARLES HERBERT STOCKTON, LL. D., President of the University

The legislative acts concerned with the establishment of the seat of government of the District of Columbia consisted of the Act of the General Assembly of Maryland of December 22, 1788, and the Act of the General Assembly of Virginia of December 3, 1789, and the Act of the Congress of the United States of July 16, 1791, accepting grants of territory conveyed in the two acts of the General Assemblies of Maryland and Virginia just referred to.

Before the final acceptance by Congress of the grants of the two states of Maryland and Virginia and the final determination as to the seat of the general government, President Washington addressed Congress in 1790 in a message treating of the subject of a system of national education. Washington was impressed especially with the fact that the resort for higher education as collegiate education was then called, to the English universities no longer met the needs of the new nation, and its democratic principles and society.

In his message he said: "Whether this desirable object would be best promoted by offering aid to seminaries of learning already established, by the institution of a national university, or by any other expedients, will be well worthy of a place in the deliberations of the legislature."

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia on February 18, 1795, informed Washington in answer to his offer of a gift for a National University in his life time (which was similar to what he eventually left in his will), that subject to his approval they had chosen a site in the District for a National University. I might mention here that the par value of the fifty shares of the Potomac Company offered by Washington as a gift for this purpose were valued then at $22,200. The site referred to which met with Washington's approval was the one bounded by 23d and 25th Streets and E Street N. W., the Potomac at that time forming the southern boundary. In after years this site was occupied by the Naval Observatory Buildings, and is now occupied by the Naval Medical School and its Hospital and residences near by. This site had in the earliest days of the District been proposed as a site for a fort and barracks and used as a camp for troops afterwards, and was known first as Peter's Hill after the well-known and still-existing family of Peter of Georgetown and the District, and afterwards as Camp Hill. By the filling up of the flats of the Potomac its boundary has been extended to B Street, and it now borders the Potomac Park and Speedway.

At a later date, near the close of his second term, Washington, more than ever convinced of the desirability of a national university as a means of highe education, made his last appeal to Congress, in which he said: "Its desirable ness has so constantly increased with every new view that I have taken of th subject, that I cannot omit the opportunity of, once for all, recalling you attention to it." Among the expected advantages he suggests the following "The assimilation of the principles, opinions and manners of our countrymen by the common education of a portion of our youth from every quarter. "The more homogeneous our citizens can be made in these particulars th greater will be the prospect of permanent union." As a testimony of his dee and growing interest in this enterprise, he left at his death in December, 179 this bequest in his last will and testament: "I give the fifty shares which hold in the Potomac Company towards the endowment of a University, to b established within the limits of the District of Columbia, under the auspice of the General Government, if that Government should incline to extend fostering hand towards it."

President Jefferson having views differing from those of Washington a to the power of Congress to provide for such general objects, commends nevertheless, this recommendation of Washington in his message to Congres of December 2, 1806, urging it on their present consideration. Presiden Madison early in his first term of office earnestly presented the same objec in his message of December 5, 1810. He enlarges upon the reasons whic prevailed with Washington in the following words: "Such an institutio though local in its legal character, would be universal in its beneficial effect By enlightening the opinions, by expanding the patriotism, and by assimilatin the principles, the sentiments, and the manners of those who might resort t this temple of science, to be re-distributed in due time through every part o the community, sources of jealousy and prejudice would be diminished, th features of national character would be multiplied, and greater extent give to social harmony. But above all, a well constituted seminary in the centr of the nation is recommended by the consideration, that the additional in struction emanating from it would contribute not less to strengthen the foun dations than to adorn the structure of our free and happy system of go ernment."

At the close of the war in his message of December 5, 1815, Preside Madison returns to this subject and reiterates his appeal as follows: "Su an institution claims the patronage of Congress as a monument of their soli tude for the advancement of knowledge, without which the blessings of liber cannot be fully enjoyed, or long preserved; as a model, instructive in t formation of other seminaries; as a nursery of enlightened preceptors; a as a central resort of youth and genius from every part of their countr diffusing on their return examples of those national feelings, those liber sentiments, and those congenial manners which contribute cement to o Union, and strength to the great political fabric of which that is the foundatio

From that it can be seen that the intention of Washington, Jefferson and Madison was not to establish an institution for narrow, isolated research, but to build first of all an institution from which graduates could go to every part of the Union prepared to engage in the ordinary professions and followings of life. So as citizen leaders in their communities they would diffuse the results of their enlightened education, and in this way make more homogeneous the various nationalities of the country and assimilate by their patriotism all sections of the country and all of the newly arrived from other communities of the world which had been duly foresworn in their oath of allegiance and naturalization.

The long entertained opinions of such men could not have been hastily conceived, and nothing but the differing views of the national Congress as to the power of the general government to act in the matter and the pressure of other claims, could have led to the continued neglect of these repeated executive recommendations. Washington's legacy of shares of the Potomac Company had in the meantime become valueless by the failure of the Company. Jefferson, after his presidency, accomplished for his state in the University of Virginia what he despaired of for the nation, and since Madison's day private enterprise has been left to meet a want which public patronage would not assume of itself, though it has at times in a meagre way fostered such enterprise.

While these appeals were being made in 1792, shortly after the establishment of the constitutional government of the United States, a college was established at Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Order of Jesuits, Georgetown being then a rival of Alexandria, and near to the former residence of Bishop Carroll. This college, now known as the Georgetown University, was established by Archbishop Carroll, and was for the times under consideration liberally endowed. It furnished for twenty-five years the needs of education for the residents of Washington and the South Atlantic States of that communion. Since then the Gonzaga College and the Catholic University have been also established for such needs hereabouts and elsewhere.

To these institutions have been added the Columbian University, now the George Washington University, a non-sectarian institution for white people, while the Howard University, largely aided by the government, meets the requirements of the colored people of African descent in this part of the United States. Of late a post graduate institution known as the American University, under the auspices of the Methodist denomination has been established as a school for research and advanced scholarship.

About the year 1817, during the administration of President Monroe, the Rev. Luther Rice, agent of the Baptist General Convention of the United States, conceived the idea of founding a college in the City of Washington. In 1819 a lot of ground north of Washington, the site afterwards occupied by Columbian College, embracing nearly forty-seven acres, extending about half a mile northwards from Boundary Street, between 14th and 15th streets, was purchased by Mr. Rice for a sum of about $7,000. Mr. Rice reported to the Tri-Annual Baptist Convention at their meeting in 1820 that this purchase was made to be presented to that body, to promote the education of the ministry, and ultimately for the formation of a college under the direction of the Baptist General Convention.

Mr. Rice was formerly a missionary abroad, and seemed to be indefatigable in his efforts for the various causes which he undertook. A prominent cause dear to his heart seemed to be that of education. A journal of his efforts before the establishment of the College exists in the archives of the University. It contains his receipts and expenditures, with a very concise account of his wanderings, which were largely on horseback or in a wagon. The time of the journal extends from 1815 to 1819; and the country visited as an itinerant agent, collector and missionary covered New England, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia and North Carolina.

On October 30, 1816, Mr. Rice made the following entries in his journal, which are quoted as characteristic of his remarks and travels: "McNeill's Store, Moore County, North Carolina, at Brother Archibald McNeill's. Read through a historical account of St. Helena and the manner of Napoleon's being conveyed to it, last evening. Finished the long letter to my brother this morning. Received donation from Brother McNeill and from his children.—To dinner and baiting—$.50 * * * * *

"October 31. Mountain Creek, Richmond County, N. C., at Brother William Bostick. Finding I could not be supplied with a candle at Esq. Martin's, where I first put up last evening, I came here and finished a letter to Brother Cheesman. Had an ill night. Wrote this morning one letter. Proceed to Fair ground 4 miles, to Hedgecock Creek 9 miles. Here are a saw-mill and a grist-mill,—to Rockingham, 1 mile, Richmond Court House—to Solomon's Creek 8 miles, to Stewartstown 4 miles, in all 26 miles today. A pleasant day."

The Baptist Convention was so favorably impressed with the project of Mr. Rice of locating an educational institution at Washington that to enable them to embrace it in their operation they proceeded at once to adapt their constitution to the undertaking and passed resolutions accepting the proposed site.

In the meantime a charter was obtained from Congress by an act approved by President Monroe, February 1, 1821. It gave powers to the University trustees and faculty allowing the organization of academic and professional schools, and granting of certificates of attainment and diplomas of graduation in the several departments. One of the provisions of the charter was that "Persons of every religious denomination shall be capable of being elected as trustees; nor shall any person, either as president, professor, tutor or pupil, be refused admittance into said college, or be denied any of its privileges, immunities or advantages thereof on account of his sentiments in matters of religion." In pursuance of these provisions the several departments of the college—preparatory, collegiate, theological, law and medical—were soon organized. The main building for the college, 117 feet long by 47 wide, was begun early in 1820, and was finished sufficiently in 1822 at a cost of $35,000 to allow of the opening of the college. The college building was at that time considered to be central and about half an hour's walk from the White House, from the Capitol, from the Smithsonian Institution, from the then National Observatory, and generally from the public buildings in the City of Washington. The building was a brick edifice, four stories high, including the basement and attic, with sufficient room to accommodate one hundred students. In addition there were three other brick buildings, one occupied by the President and his family, another by the steward of the college, and the other was used as a hall for the philosophical apparatus belonging to the college, and also housed the preparatory department of the institution. Although most of the funds of the college were obtained by Mr. Rice, the agent, from members of the Baptist denomination, a number of personal donations and expressions of interest were received from men of eminence at home and abroad: from such men as Moses Stuart, John Quincy Adams, John C. Calhoun, Wm. H. Crawford and Richard Rush at home and kindred spirits, including The Bishop of Durham, Joseph John Gurney, William Wilberforce, Lord Ashburton and others in what was then regarded as the mother country. Concerning the institution of this college, President Monroe states: "There is good reason to believe that the hopes of those who have so patriotically contributed to advance it to its present stage will not be disappointed. Its commencement will be under circumstances very favorable to its success. Its position, on the high grounds north of the city, is remarkably healthy. The act of incorporation is well digested, looks to the proper objects, and grants the powers well adapted to their attainment."

The opening of the college is thus described in the National Intelligencer of January 15, 1822, under the heading of "Columbian College." It says: "The inauguration of the faculty took place at the institution in College Hall, January 9. At ten o'clock a. m. the procession formed at the house of Professor Chase, and moved to the College Chapel. The solemnities were introduced by prayer by the Rev. Burgess Allison, D. D., the Chaplain of Congress, one of the vice-presidents of the General (Baptist) Convention; the president of the body, the Rev. Robert B. Semple, of Virginia, not having been able to attend. The act of incorporation passed at the last session of Congress was read, and from the records of the trustees the elections, respectively, of the members of the faculty. The Rev. Obadiah B. Brown, President of the Board of Trustees, then rose and addressed the President of the College, the Rev. Dr. William Staughton, in a few but very appropriate observations, presented him with the keys of the edifice, and invested him with the prerogatives of his office, and successively greeted by the proper attributes the various members of the faculty. * * * This was followed by an address from the President, the Rev. Dr. Staughton, the merits of which cannot be too highly appreciated. The crowded audience, among whom were several of the heads of the departments, and of both houses of Congress, manifestly experienced the greatest satisfaction."

The situation of the new college on College Hill was said at the time to afford a view which was very beautiful. Alexandria, Washington and Georgetown were in full view. The Capitol, the White House and other public buildings could be plainly seen from the windows of the rooms of the students. The view down the Potomac in exceptional circumstances included Mount Vernon.

The college opened with 39 students, which number increased until more than 250 had been received. The library was obtained principally at first in England and Germany, and numbered between three and four thousand volumes. At the institution of the College a very interesting letter was received from President Monroe giving expression of his personal confidence and hope for its success. At a later date John Quincy Adams became its special friend and patron; assisting it with a loan of nearly $20,000 in its time of need, of which he relinquished as a donation the sum of $7,000; and during his presidency he frequently visited the College and watched its progress.

The Medical Department was begun in March, 1825, soon after the establishment of the College, under the conduct of Thomas Sewall, M. D., and occupying at first a building erected by the Professors themselves, was granted afterwards the occupancy of rooms in and the care of the United States Infirmary, which building was consumed by fire while in use afterwards as a military hospital during the late war, the Medical Department having then the use of the building lately occupied by the Surgical Museum, and given by Mr. W. W. Corcoran.

The first commencement of Columbian College was held on the 15th of December, 1824, the President of the United States, the Secretaries of State, of War and of the Navy and leading members of both houses of Congress being present. General LaFayette, of Revolutionary fame, then on his visit to the United States, was present at these exercises. At a later hour a formal address of welcome was made to General LaFayette by the President of the College, after which the General and his suite, with the Secretary of State, the Hon. John Quincy Adams; the Secretary of War, the Hon. John C. Calhoun, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Hon. Henry Clay, together with other distinguished citizens, dined with the Board of Trustees, among whom was Postmaster General Meigs, and the members of the Faculty of the College at the house of President Staughton.

The Law Department was organized in 1826, the Hon. William T. Carroll and Mr. Justice Cranch being its first professors. It was discontinued on account of the financial embarrassments of the College, and was not revived until 1865. A Theological School also was founded, but was soon after removed to Newton, Massachusetts, where it now flourishes. The only aid from public sources ever received for the College, or, as a matter of fact, the University, was a grant of $25,000 in city lots, made by Congress in 1832, during the presidency of Andrew Jackson; the Jesuit College at Georgetown obtaining a similar gratuity at the same time. The few lots remaining in possession of the University are now valued at the same amount.

More serious were the financial difficulties. Though there had been many contributions, the expenses had been heavy in the construction and equipment of suitable buildings, and in the payment of salaries and other current expenses. The receipts from tuition fees were entirely inadequate to meet the regular expenses, and, with no productive endowment, an indebtedness was sure to arise and to grow. The plans of the projectors were on a more liberal scale than the contributions, and in 1826 the Baptist Convention withdrew its connection with the College. In 1827 the Faculty resigned in a body, and the exercises were suspended. In the spring of 1828, however, the College reopened and from that date its progress has been steady, if at times slow. For the first fifteen years there was indeed a constant struggle for existence rather than for progress, and only the continued exertions and self-denying labors of Trustees and Faculty kept the College alive.

Yet during all this time faithful and learned Professors, serving for meagre salaries, and refusing more liberal offers from other institutions, imparted instructions to students whose zeal and abilities have been proven by the honorable stations they have since attained in the service of the Church and the State.

Dr. Staughton resigned the presidency in 1827, and in 1828 the Rev. Stephen Chapin, D.D., was chosen as his successor.

On the 25th of September, 1836, occurred the death of the Rev. Luther Rice, the man to whom, more than any other, the founding of the College was due.

In the tribute paid to his memory by the Board of Trustees it was gratefully recognized that the College was "mainly indebted for its existence to his generous and laborious efforts," and that in the days of its "deepest adversity" it had been "sustained by his unwearied and persevering assiduity more than by any other means." It was added: "No discouragement could ever damp his zeal, no opposition could allay his ardor for its prosperity." Resolutions of respect for his memory were adopted and the President of the College was requested to deliver an obituary discourse in honor of his life, character, and services.

President Chapin resigned in 1841, after an administration of thirteen years, during which the College gradually escaped from the burdens of distrust and debt, under which it was staggering when he accepted the Presidency.

In 1843, the Rev. Joel S. Bacon, D.D., became President. At this time the College was freed from debt, though it had no endowment. Under President Bacon the collection of a permanent endowment was commenced, and efforts to increase that endowment have been continued during the succeeding administrations. Dr. Bacon having resigned the Presidency in 1854, the Rev. Dr. Binney, a returned missionary from Burma was chosen to succeed him. He engaged to hold the office for only a brief term, and gave place in 1859 to the Rev. George W. Samson, D.D., whose difficult task it was, with the aid of his colleagues, to carry the institution through the time and trials of the Civil War.

At the outbreak of the war the number of students in attendance was greater than at any previous period, but most of them soon left, principally for the South, and shortly afterwards the College buildings were occupied by the Government for hospital purposes. The College exercises, however, were not suspended, and the few students who continued in attendance received able instruction in the class rooms.

The end of the Civil War brought a reunion in Columbian College as well as in the country at large. A number of students and instructors came to the College from the military forces of the South. Among the latter was Mr. William L. Wilson, a previous graduate, who wore his gray uniform for some time as instructor in the class room. Mr. Wilson became afterwards an Overseer of the College and a leading figure in political life both as a member of the House of Representatives from West Virginia and as Postmaster-General in the Cabinet of President Cleveland. He was a charming and cultivated gentleman in all positions of life and died as President of the Washington and Lee University in Virginia.

In 1867 the catalogue of the College showed a decided increase since the stormy times of the Civil War, there being twenty-six instructors and four hundred and thirty-nine students in all. From the foundation of the Columbian College in 1821 down to 1871, the end of President Samson's régime, the whole number of students graduated from all departments was 1,184 in fifty years being a yearly average of less than twenty-four. Dr. Welling speaks of the Rev. Dr. Samson's term as President as one in which during a time of unexampled storm and pressure "he had lenghtened its cords as well as strengthened it stakes." The Law School had been successfully re-established during his administration. Mr. W. W. Corcoran had presented a Medical School building to the University and Mr. Amos Kendall, Postmaster-General under Jackson, had founded the Kendall Scholarships. In addition, before the end of Dr. Samson's term, a comprehensive scheme of collegiate reconstruction had been adopted by the Board of Trustees. At the time of Dr. Samson's resignation in July 22, 1871, a committee was appointed by the Board of Trustees to offer the Presidency of the College to Dr. James C. Welling, then Professor of Belles-Lettres in Princeton College, a former resident of Washington.

On the 25th of July, 1871, the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia mended by law the Charter of the Columbian College so that the Board of Trustees became a self-perpetuating body.

On the 10th of August, 1871, Professor Welling accepted the Presidency of he Columbian College, and on the 7th of October, 1872, recommended imme-iate measures for raising a permanent endowment fund of $250,000. Mr. V. W. Corcoran, President of the Board of Trustees, proposed to give the Trinidad Estate of 152 acres immediately adjoining the city of Washington s his contribution to the permanent endowment of the College. This, when old, became the nucleus of what is known as the Corcoran Endowment Fund. Ir. Corcoran with Mr. John Withers of Alexandria, remain today as the only rge benefactors of Columbian College and University. On the 27th of anuary, 1873, the Trustees were authorized by the Corporation to sell the roperty on College Hill and to locate all of the departments of the College in he heart of Washington. On the March following the name of the institution as changed by Act of Congress to the Columbian University. At that time he College and University consisted of the

College proper with an enrollment of	40
Law School with an enrollment of	103
Medical School with an enrollment of	48
And a Preparatory School with an enrollment of	75

Making a total of the College and allied schools of 266 students.

In 1884 the new building erected at 15th and H Streets, N. W., being com-eted, the University in its departments of the College proper, the Law and cientific Schools, took possession of this structure. The Chemical Laboratories ere added from time to time and formed an extensive lateral annex on the outh line of the lot, being separated from the main building by a heavy brick all.

On June 7, 1882, a new preparatory school building was authorized and ubsequently erected on H Street between 13th and 14th Streets and is now a art of the University Hospital, the preparatory school having been discon-nued as a part of the University in 1897, there being no necessity for its ontinuance as a part of the College and University system in the face of the xcellent High Schools of the District.

The grounds on College Hill, the original site of the College, extended along 4th Street from Florida Avenue to Columbia Road. Sales of this property ad been made in three periods. The south sixteen acres were sold in sub-vided building lots beginning about 1868. Total receipts were about $65,000. he north sixteen acres were sold in 1882 for $50,000. The remainder was sold 1883 for $87,500. Details concerning this are given in the Treasurer's report r 1886.

On October 1, 1884, the Corcoran Scientific School was established and augurated.

On March 15, 1885, the Admiral Powell Scholarships for those desiring entry into the Navy or the Mercantile Marine were established on the foundation of a bequest made to the University by Admiral Levin M. Powell, of the United States Navy.

On June 15, 1885, Mr. Wm. W. Corcoran gave to the University a lot of ground in the rear of the Medical College building with a view to the eventual extension of that building. The Medical School was and still is situated on H Street between 13th and 14th Streets. In October, 1887, the Dental School was established in connection with the Medical College, and housed in the same building.

February 24, 1888, Mr. Wm. W. Corcoran, the President of the Corporation since 1869, died. He was during that period a constant benefactor to the College and University and it is hoped that his name will be permanently linked with the University, not only by a restoration of the Corcoran Endowment Fund to its full value, but by naming some dignified structure in the future after this generous benefactor, friend and official of the institution.

Although the University from its institution until 1904 had been more or less under the control of the Baptist denomination, and the President of the Institution was a member of that denomination, it received but a poor and vacillating support financially from that denomination. After the separation of the Baptists into Northern and Southern bodies, it suffered accordingly in its contributions. Its greatest contributor was a member of the Episcopal Church—Mr. W. W. Corcoran—and it drifted away so much from the Baptist denomination that in December 27, 1888, it was determined by President Welling to bring the University to the attention of a newly formed Baptist Education Society. On May 18, 1889, a committee of the Board of Managers of that Society made a report to the Board which on October 2, 1889, adopted the report and in it states that "the effort of the Trustees and Overseers of the University to secure an adequate endowment of the institution should be and is commended to the favorable consideration of the denomination."

The effect of this appeal and commendation does not seem to have been of much consequence for the University which went on in its usual way. In 1893 the School of Graduate Studies was organized under the charge of Dean Munroe, who was also Professor of Chemistry of the University and who remains in both capacities at the present day.

President Welling resigned from the Presidency of the Columbian University June 18, 1894, and died shortly afterwards. His career was the most successful one up to that time and extended for a period of twenty-three years, the longest term held by any president of the College or University since its institution. The first endowment of the University was made in response to his efforts. The University grew from a college to a university in fact during his long term and he left behind him the memory of an agreeable and accomplished scholar a public spirited resident of Washington, whose life has been identified with he city with much distinction not only in social life but also in his civic and ıational services.

The Rev. Dr. S. H. Greene of Calvary Baptist Church, of the city acted as President from the departure of Dr. Welling, until the Rev. B. L. Whitman, D. D., was elected to succeed Dr. Welling, July 1, 1895. Dr. Whitman had been previously the President of Colby University in the state of Maine. He was a man of fine presence and an eloquent preacher of the Baptist denomination and not unnaturally after a short term returned to parochial life.

In 1898 the Law School building was erected adjacent to the College building at 15th and H Streets, N. W. The same year Congress amended the charter by an Act which required that two-thirds of the Trustees of the University and the President of the University shall be members of regular Baptist churches. The overseers were abolished and the Trustees were divided into three classes of seven each.

Dr. Whitman resigned on January 19, 1900, to take effect April 1, 1900. From that date until June 18, 1902, Dr. S. H. Greene again acted as President of the University. On the latter date Dr. C. W. Needham, a layman, a member of the District bar, who had been Dean of the Law School was elected President of the University.

In 1904, Congress passed an Act restoring the non-denominational character of the institution, and permitting a change in its name. In 1902 the New Medical School building had been finished and a very considerable addition made to its hospital. The same year the Columbian College, the Corcoran Scientific School, and the School of Graduate Studies were merged into one Department of Arts and Sciences. In 1903 conferences were held between the representatives of the Washington Memorial Institution, the George Washington Memorial Association, which had been incorporated in 1898, and of the Columbian University with a view to combine and form a Memorial Institution and Hall bearing the name of George Washington for graduate work and research and for coöperation in such work. For some time the name Columbian had been confused with that of Columbia College and University in New York, making such a change desirable for that among other reasons.

On September 1, 1904, a proposition of the George Washington Memorial Association that Columbian University change its name to that of the George Washington University was accepted by the Board of Trustees. As previously mentioned on January 23, this year, Congress passed an act making the University non-sectarian and giving the Board of Trustees power to change its name. A proposition from the George Washington Memorial Association had been made about that time to erect the Memorial Building at a cost of $500,000 to be used for graduate study and scientific research.

About this time, however, Mr. Andrew Carnegie established an Institute for Scientific Research, to be placed in Washington, D. C., with a munificent endowment, and covering the field of research proposed by the Memorial Association. This caused the abandonment of the project for the erection o the George Washington Memorial Hall, which had, however, advanced so fa as the adoption of plans for this and other University buildings, prepared b Messrs. George B. Post & Sons, architects, of New York City.

The first convocation of the newly named George Washington Universit took place on February 22, 1905. In 1905 an Act of Congress was passe allowing the incorporation of colleges with financial autonomy to be affiliate with the University. Under this act the National College of Pharmacy an the College of Veterinary Medicine were subsequently organized and affiliated In 1907, the College of Political Sciences was formed as a separate school i the University, and during the same year the Division of Education was als formed. At a later period the College of Political Sciences was amalgamate with the College of Arts and Sciences under the revived name of Columbia College, while the Division of Education became the Teachers College of th present day.

In 1910 and 1911 the Board of Trustees of the University drew up regula tions providing for the representation of the alumni on the Board of Trustee by six of the alumni of the University, holders of any degree, honorary or i course, of not less than ten years standing, the voters being holders of an degree of not less than three years standing. These regulations have gon into effect and six out of the twenty-one members of the Board of Trustee are composed of elected representatives of the alumni of the University.

The division of Architecture now existing in the College of Engineering takes the place of the College of Architecture formerly existing as a part o the University. It has always secured the interest of the local architects an has received at times generous aid from them.

The original charter of the Columbian College provided that the records o the proceedings, finances, etc. of the College should be open to the inspectio or examination of the Attorney-General of the United States. On April 25 1910, the House of Representatives requested such examination by the Offic of the Attorney-General. On June 2, 1910, the Attorney-General made a pre liminary report upon the financial affairs of the University and found that th expenses of the University had exceeded its income which resulted in th impairment of some of the endowment funds of the University and a very considerable indebtedness. A final report was made upon this subject by th Department of Justice on December 6, 1910.

On August 31, 1910, Dr. Charles W. Needham resigned as President of th University. Admiral Charles H. Stockton, LL.D., U.S.N. retired, was elected as Acting President from the Board of Trustees on August 31, 1910, an elected President of the University on November 30, 1910. In the meantim a re-organization of the University and reduction of the expenditures wa effected which was followed by a sale of the property at 15th and H Street N. W. The Law School was moved to the Masonic Temple building at 13t and H Streets being placed in the upper stories of that edifice. The remaining College departments of Arts and Sciences except that of Chemistry, were moved to a series of buildings on I Street between 16th Street and Vermont Avenue. The Medical and Dental Schools with the Department of Chemistry remained established in the University building on H Street between 13th and 14th Streets, N. W. The Associated Schools remained in the buildings previously occupied by them.

In 1912 the Departments in the I Street buildings were removed to their present quarters on G Street between 20th and 21st Streets, which were at first rented but the following year were purchased by the University. Since then an Engineering Laboratory has been erected in the rear of the building just mentioned and other property in the vicinity acquired or rented. Two buildings at 13th and L Streets have been also acquired by the University for a Nurses Home through the efforts of the Board of Lady Managers of the University Hospital.

A provision was made in 1910 for the impairments of the endowment funds which had occurred at various times from the earliest days of Columbian College until 1910 by a deed of trust upon the most valuable property of the University, on H Street, N. W., upon which the Medical and Dental Schools and the University Hospital are now placed.

The financial condition of the University is now good, there being a small but effective endowment fund, considerable property on G Street and elsewhere, besides the H Street property and Law, Medical and Arts and Sciences libraries amounting to over 48,000 volumes, an excellent teaching plant and enrollment during 1915-16 of 1,973 students in all of the Departments. This is the greatest enrollment in the history of the University.

This enrollment is divided among the various schools of the University as follows:

Graduate School	115
Columbian College	699
Engineering	231
Teachers College	152
Law	424
Medicine	149
Dentistry	126
Pharmacy	48
Veterinary	65
	2,009
Less duplicates	36

Of this number about seventy-five per cent. attend at the late hours after 5 P. M. and 449 of the total are women. Since its founding in 1821 the University has conferred 8,734 degrees upon 7,120 persons.

CO-EDUCATIONAL MOVEMENT.

In 1881 when the question of a re-organization and expansion of the University came under discussion it was suggested by the Committee appointed for that purpose, that women should be admitted to all schools and departments of the University on the recommendation of a majority of the Faculties in each school and subject to the approval of the Corporation.

In 1884 after prolonged consideration, a bare majority of the Faculty of the Medical School favored the admission of women to the Medical School and the first woman graduate received a diploma in March, 1887.

In 1884, when the Corcoran Scientific School was opened, women were admitted to it.

In 1888 one woman was admitted to Columbian College under special regulations, and in 1889 women were admitted under the same regulations as men.

In the Medical School and Law School the admissions of women had a varying history, but at present all schools and departments of the University are open to women, and as a matter of fact there are women in all departments except the Veterinary College. There are no more loyal graduates of the College and University than these women.

PROFESSIONAL SCHOOLS.

The Medical School of the University was established as previously mentioned in 1825. Chronologically it is in order of establishment the seventeenth medical school in the United States. For many years the school was known as the National Medical College, subsequently as the Department of Medicine of the Columbian University. It now bears the official title of The Medical School of the George Washington University.

When it was first established and for many years afterwards, the Medical School, like most others in the United States, gave only a two years' course of five months each. In 1878 the course was lengthened by the establishment of a Spring Session devoted to lectures in certain special subjects. In 1879 the course was lengthened to seven months and attendance upon three annual sessions was required, and in 1893 attendance upon four annual sessions was required from all candidates for the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In order to increase the facilities for actual bedside teaching the University Hospital and the University Dispensary were established in 1898 and made a part of the Medical School. In 1902 the old Medical School building in use since 1897 gave way to the present large and well-arranged structure.

The Medical School has been for several years a member of the Association of American Medical Colleges and it is one of the schools contained in Class A of that Association. The degree of M. D. given by the University is recognized by every Medical Examining Board in the United States as evidence of adequate medical education and it is accredited for all of the work by the combined (Royal) Medical Examining Boards in England. At least one year at college is required for admission. The Medical School is the only one of the departments of the University which requires so many hours of attendance as to bar admission to employees of the general government. With its adjoining hospital and dispensary it is in excellent condition.

The Law School of the University was first organized as previously mentioned in 1826, but was discontinued a year later. In 1865 it was re-established and has been in continuous session since that time. It is the oldest law school in the District of Columbia. It began with a two years' course and with only two instructors, one for the senior class and one for the junior class. During the earlier period its classes met for one hour session on three evenings of the week. At present the course for the degree of Bachelor of Laws requires three years of attendance averaging twelve hours of class work per week and the classes meet both in the forenoon and in the late afternoon. Its faculty has grown from two to fifteen, six of whom devote their entire time to its work.

In 1900 the Law School became one of the charter members of the Association of American Law Schools and it has remained a member of the Association since that time. About forty per cent. of the regular students in the Law School have graduated from college before taking their law course. Its graduates may be found in every state of the Union occupying positions of trust and honor on the bench, at the bar, in business and in the administration of the affairs of the State and Nation. In numbers it is the second school in the University and it has always borne a high reputation among the law schools of the country.

The Dental School.—The first course of lectures in the Dental School began November, 1887, under the title of The Columbian University Dental Department. The course then extended over two years of five months each. Two years later the course was extended to seven months; but this additional time being found inadequate to keep pace with the ever increasing demand for higher dental education, the course was gradually increased, until now it extends over three years of eight months each.

The College of Engineering and the Teachers College as well as the School of Graduate Studies are parts of the Department of Arts and Sciences and their curriculum has much in common with Columbian College so that they have in part only a distinct entity. Their significance is shown largely by their titles. Allied to this Department of Arts and Sciences but in an unofficial capacity is the Society of Columbian Women, who have by their exertions provided scholarships for the use of young women of merit unable to secure collegiate education.

ASSOCIATED COLLEGES.

These are institutions in the District of Columbia organized as corporations under the revised Charter of the University, having separate financial foundations but educationally forming a part of the system of the George Washington University.

The National College of Pharmacy, which is the outgrowth of the Columbian Pharmaceutical Association, organized in April, 1871, was chartered under the provisions of an Act of Congress in 1872, and opened its doors to students November 11, of that year. In February, 1906, it became a member of the educational system of the George Washington University, under the charter of the University granted by Congress March 2, 1905, providing for the organization of colleges. The President of the University is ex-officio president of the National College of Pharmacy and the College is represented in the President's Council by a Dean. The College building is centrally located on I Street, N. W., between 8th and 9th Streets.

In 1908 the College of Veterinary Medicine was organized and became an Associated College of the University with a financial autonomy and Board of Trustees of its own. Very considerable instruction is given to the students of this College in the Medical School and the Department of Chemistry of the University. Graduates from this school are eligible for examination to the army as veterinarians and for entry into the Department of Agriculture in its relation to domestic animals. After an examination and the regular course they receive the degree of Doctor of Veterinary Medicine.

The city of Washington has become more and more an educational center and a desirable place for research and residence, and the instruction late in the day specially given by this University affords opportunities for employees in the Government service and elsewhere to acquire both collegiate and professional education. The George Washington University with its many and varied activities is now performing a most useful function in the city and nation and is ready for the desired and natural expansion in plant and teaching which should soon come by the aid of its alumni, from the public spirited members of the community and from the friends of education everywhere.

The name of the institution by which it has been conferred follows the academic degree. The omission of it indicates that the degree was given by George Washington University.

A star (*) after a name denotes that the individual is deceased. In every case in which the year of the decease is known it is indicated at the right.

When an address appears in parenthesis it denotes that it is the last known address.

In case of an alumnus who holds more than one degree from George Washington University, the full record and address are given only under the school from which he was first graduated, the name only being given in the records of subsequent degrees.

In the case of married women graduates, the name under which the degree was received is given first, with the married name immediately following in parenthesis, the same rule applying to the General Index; and in the Locality Index, the graduates are listed under their married name. For example: Class List insertion—May Jane Smith (Mrs. John M. Jones); General Index insertion—Smith, May Jane (Mrs. John M. Jones), b. 06.

In 1903 the Columbian College, the Corcoran Scientific School and the Graduate School were merged into a single administrative division and named the Department of Arts and Sciences. In 1905 the undergraduate work was organized as the Columbian College, except the work in Architecture which was organized into the Division of Architecture. In the following year the engineering courses were placed under a separate organization known as the Washington College of Engineering.

The graduates, during these transition years, are listed under the divisions in which they began or finished their courses.

Department of Law

The Law School was organized in 1865. From 1898 to 1905 there existed also the School of Comparative Jurisprudence and Diplomacy, which was closely affiliated with the Law School, and had jurisdiction over the degree of LL. M., which before 1898 and since 1905 has been given by the Law School. For a few years the Law School gave the degree of L. B., as well as the degree of LL. B. Those obtaining either of these degrees are grouped together under the usual arrangement by classes.

The most important courses of study that were formerly given in the Department of Comparative Jurisprudence and Diplomacy and its successors are now given either in the School of Law or in Columbian College. Jurisdiction over the degree of LL. M. has varied from time to time as between the Department of Jurisprudence and Diplomacy and the School of Law, but for convenience all those who obtained the degree of LL. M. are here listed under these two separate heads.

The School of Jurisprudence and Diplomacy became the School of Politics and Diplomacy in 1905, and was abolished in 1907. It awarded the degrees of M. Dip. and D. C. L. The Catalogue groups those who received any such degree, under the head of the School of Jurisprudence and Diplomacy, the arrangement being by classes. Commencing with 1908, these two degrees were awarded only in the Graduate School, and School of Political Science. All who so received them appear with the other graduates of those Schools.

ALUMNI OF THE SCHOOL OF JURISPRUDENCE AND DIPLOMACY.

The Department of Comparative Jurisprudence and Diplomacy was opened in 1898. For a number of years it was closely affiliated with the Law Department, but in 1905 ceased to have any organic connection with that Department, and the name was changed to the Department of Politics and Diplomacy. In 1907 it became the College of Political Sciences of the Department of Arts and Sciences and a few years later the College of the Political Sciences became a part of Columbian College.

The most important courses of study that were given under the Department of Comparative Jurisprudence and Diplomacy and its successors are now given either in the Law School or Columbian College.

The Department of Comparative Jurisprudence and Diplomacy had jurisdiction over the degrees of LL. M., M. Dip. and D. C. L. Those who received the degree of LL. M. are listed under the Law School and the others are given here.

In 1898 the work in Law was extended and reorganized by the establishing of the Department of Comparative Jurisprudence and Diplomacy. Courses for the degrees of LL. B. and M. P. L. were continued under the direction of the Law School and courses leading to the degrees of LL. M., M. Dip. and D. C. L. were in the Department of Comparative Jurisprudence and Diplomacy. This continued until 1905, when the work for the LL. M. degree was again placed under the Law School. For convenience all persons who have received the degree of LL. M. are placed in a single list.
